AMUSEMENTS

"The Geisha" scored another hit last night before a well-filled house, presenting the play in the finished manner that has won the admiration of all local theatergoers. When it is considered that this play had not been given since their last visit here a year ago, and that, previous to the performance Monday night, they had only one rehearsal, their letter-perfect rendition of this opera, and especially the smooth precision of every move and turn made on the stage, is marvellous.

"The Geisha" is a good show. Tunes and melodies follow witty dialogues, pretty dances and ballets are interspersed with real live comedy, and their is a swing and spirit throughout the whole opera that evinces the enthusiasm of the little actors in their work.

Eva Pollard, in the title role, sang with feeling and expression in a sweet, true voice just suggestive of an adorable lisp. Every song was encoored more than once, and many floral tributes testified to her popularity.

Teddie McNamara is made up as a Chinaman, but the Irish is still there if one looks for it. Whether his dancing and "horse-play" are funnier than his Chinese or not is a hard question; but between them he gave the audience many a good, solid laugh. His song "Ching, Chong, Chinaman" made a hit, and one of his dances was encoored to the limit.

Ivy Pollard was a very pretty and charming soubrette. Her dancing was very graceful and clever, and her fascinating manner and personality were enhanced by the pretty Japanese costumes she wore. Her dance and song when she appeared as "Roly Poly Sam" was one of the best things of the evening.

The Heintz Twins got in some of the funny work, Freddie being particularly good in the part of Marquis Imari. Tada Hind was very pretty as a French girl at the tea house, and Irene Pinlay sang beautifully.

There will be one more performance of "The Geisha" tonight, a matinee tomorrow, and then the little folks will make their farewell appearance tomorrow night in the favorite play, "The Runaway Girl."

Park Vandeville Good.
The Park Theater inaugurated its vaudeville feature last evening in connection with new moving picture films, and scored a hit. The Little Melnotte Sisters are clever songsters, with clear voices, and they were encoored on each appearance. George Milne, as a ballad singer, is excellent and should prove a drawing card for the rest of the week in singing illustrated songs. Both the Melnotte Sisters and Milne will sing in a spotlight while the pictures are projected on the screen. The new films, mostly of Italian make, are strong and clear. Manager Werner may bring the Nagle-Adams company from the Coast late in the spring.

THE KAISER IN CONTRAST.
A man's character can usually be summed up in the phrase, "Take him all round," he is this, or that, or the other; if there is one man in Europe to whom you cannot fit a character in this way, he is King Edward's host.

The Kaiser is clever, one man says, and it is quit true, as this story shows. When the ballet Coppelia was in rehearsal at the opera house in Berlin his majesty came to see how it was going on. Things were all at sixes and sevens, and after he had watched the muddle for some time, he mounted the stage and began to coach the ballet girls in person, showing a perfect knowledge of theatrical routine. He then instructed the orchestra how the music was to be played, taking the baton out of the conductor's hand and conducting them himself.

Stage manager, conductor, musicians, actors, actresses and ballet girls gazed in astonishment at his majesty, whereupon he turned to them and remarked: "Yes, yes, you may stare at me, but you know that my interpretation is correct." And, as a matter of fact, it was, and the ballet went splendidly.

This is only one instance of the Kaiser's cleverness in unexpected places, but there is another side to the picture. One of his first acts as sovereign was to show his ministers how the imperial arms should be printed, but after it had been in use for some time an antiquary of great learning proved that the new design was not only wrong, but even humiliating to the Kaiser. At the same time, his majesty "sub-edited" the German money order form in such a way that the public could make neither head nor tail of it, and thousands of pounds' worth of unused forms had to be destroyed.

Then he is kind-hearted, and in proof of that take the occasion of his visit of Honor. The pupils of the college of Honor thought the visit would be an admirable chance for a holiday, but the college authorities thought otherwise. So, on behalf of his class, one of the pupils went to a public telephone, and rang up the Schloss Schaumburg, in Bonn, where the Kaiser was staying.

He wanted, he said, to speak to his majesty on a matter of the greatest urgency, and he was so mysterious about it that the Kaiser actually came to the other end of the line. The boy poured out his petition into his astonished ears, and laughing heartily, the Kaiser promised that the holiday would be granted. Next day one of the court chamberlains went to the headmaster and announced the imperial will that the college should be closed when his majesty visited Honor.

So much for his kindness of heart, but his treatment of some of his elderly generals is, to say the least, inconsiderate. At maneuvers, when he is surrounded by a large staff of officers, some of the older ones not so easy in the saddle as they once were, he will suddenly gallop off across the country, choosing the most difficult route, over hedges and ditches. His staff go streaming after him, and those who are not "in at the finish" are carefully, noted as being unfit for further service, and are dismissed at the first opportunity.

Who can be more generous than William II? Nobody, surely, as the following anecdote would serve to show: The farmer who owned the little farmstead in the village of Rezonville, in which the Kaiser's grandfather passed the night on the eve of the battle of St. Privat, was in distressed circumstances. When his majesty heard this, he purchased the house for £1,000, about three times its value, and told the old man he could stay there as long as he lived.

But the Kaiser can also take advantage of his authority to be very mean. A wealthy native of Bremen presented his town with a beautiful statue, and there was some suggestion that the Kaiser might present another statue. The Kaiser promptly sent for the merchant, and told him that he ought to erect a second statue as a "pendant" to the first. An imperial wish is a command, and the merchant felt himself compelled to erect another statue equally costly.

It is not necessary to give instances of the Kaiser on his dignity; some people may think it impossible he could be anything other than kindly.

His majesty, however, can be vulgar without being even funny. One day at maneuvers he went to the mess room and yelled out, "Come along with those sausages!" After a hearty meal during which several highly spiced sausages quickly disappeared, washed down by many mugs of beer, he heaved a great sigh of satisfaction, and patted his stomach approvingly. "I'm much more comfortable inside now," he said.—Pearson's Weekly.

A SPRAINED ANKLE.
As a rule a man will feel well satisfied if he can hobble around on crutches in two or three weeks after spraining his ankle, and it is two or three months before he is fully recovered. This is an unnecessary loss of time, for in many cases in which Chamberlain's Pain Balm has been promptly and freely applied a complete cure has been effected in less than one week's time, and in some cases within three days. Pain Balm is most widely known, however, for its cure of rheumatism. For sale by all dealers. Benson, Smith & Co., Ltd., agents for Hawaii.

A Man Bought a House

But Didn't Get It

WHY, HOW WAS THAT?

Well! Paid the landlord the full cost of a house and lot, but the landlord still owns the property, and intends to keep it. HE RENTED. We see people every day who have paid enough money for rent receipts to buy a house, and many of them will pay for another house the same way if they keep on renting. You are buying a house, anyway, when you pay rent, but you will never own it. Why not get something for the money?
